UNCLE SAM'S COOKING SCHOOL

Government Turning Out Finished Cooks and Bakers

Everett Dye, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Dye of Laclede, who enlisted in the United States army about two years ago and has been stationed at Ft. Lawton near Seattle, will this month graduate and receive his diploma from the army school for cooks and bakers at San Francisco, Cali. Few people know that the United States conducts a cooking school, yet it has such an institution where many finished bakers as well as finished cooks are turned out. The men are selected from various companies and must have at least one and one-half years more to serve in their enlistment. They must show some adaptability for either cooking or baking and a desire to study. They must be possessed of a certain amount of intelligence and be men of regular habits. Those in the cooking class are taught to cook everything while those in the baking class are taught to make bread, pies, pastry and all other things which a first-class baker should know how to make. When they have completed their course and received diplomas these men are scattered about through the army to serve the remainder of their enlistments. Many of them remain in the army for life. Others leave at the end of their four years and accept positions as cooks or bakers in civil life, and it is said to be a noteworthy fact that these graduates of the army school command higher salaries than those from any other training establishments in the country. One reason for this is that they are not taught merely to cook or bake but are instructed in the science of their trade. Mr. Dye has taken instructions in both branches.

Laclede's Greatest Need

Laclede has ample church facilities, a fine school building that is filling the present needs of the district, a splendid electric lighting system, an excellent telephone system, a well kept park, many fine homes and when the new Benson building is completed the present shortage of business and office rooms will be relieved for a time; therefore at the present time our greatest need is an opera house or public hall. It is nothing less than a calamity for a town the size of Laclede to be without a public meeting place. But that is the very condition we are in. If we are to maintain our standing as progressive and live people something must be done. Realizing this fact the city council has called a special election to be held Saturday, September 27, at which time the proposition to bond the city in the sum of five thousand dollars for the purpose of buying a site and building a city hall will be submitted. Voters should become interested in this matter and be prepared to decide for the best interest of all concerned.
